Fauquier County.

We call the attention of purchasers of land especially to FAUQUIER and the surrounding counties, as combining advantages and inducements to an extent unequalled by any other portion of the State, and unsurpassed by any other portion of the U. S.

Between the South West Mountain and the Potomac, a distance of eighty miles along the Eastern slope of the Blue Ridge, and embracing the counties of Loudoun, Fauquier, Culpeper, Rappahannock, Green, Orange and Madison, four railroads penetrate and traverse the country centering in Alexandria, Washington, and one of them also in Richmond (affording prompt communication with the great markets). The soil is rich, producing from 15 to 35 bushels wheat and from 30 to 75 bushels corn to the acre, and other cereals in proportion, for which the farmers are obtaining enormous prices. Apples, peaches, pears, plums and grapes of all varieties grow in abundance and are extensively cultivated. For grazing farms Fauquier and Loudoun are unsurpassed by the celebrated blue grass lands of Kentucky. The natural soil is blue grass, making the best superb pasture in the world. During the fall, sheep are driven here from New York and even from Maine and West, some herds even from Missouri and Texas, and by the following summer, with little expense to the farmer, their value is increased at least one hundred per cent. This is the easiest and most profitable farming in the world.

The Fauquier White Sulphur Springs 35 miles from Warrenton are deservedly celebrated. Warrenton the county seat of Fauquier is a beautiful town of 1,800 inhabitants, situated upon a ridge commanding a magnificent view of the rich valleys around and the mountain spurs intersecting them. The tall spires of its beautiful churches and the handsome suburban residences combine with its commanding position to form one of the most picturesque and attractive landscapes which can be well conceived.

The churches represent all denominations, and will compare favorably in every respect with those in our large cities; especially may this be said of the new Baptist church, approaching completion, which in size, interior finish, and arrangement, is unsurpassed by any in the State.

Among its numerous and flourishing schools for both sexes, the Fauquier Female Institute is well worthy of mention, and will attract the attention of the most casual visitor. Warrenton is eight hours journey, by railroad from Richmond, three hours from Alexandria, three and a half hours from Washington and five hours from Baltimore. From May to October it overflows with visitors from those cities and others North and South, making it with the Springs one of the most delightful Summer resorts in the country. The water of this section is free stone.—Fauquier Land Journal.

Prisoners during the Late War.

The last number of the Southern Review contains an article on "Federal Policy and Northern Prisoners," which opens with a vindication of the late Confederate authorities from the atrocities that have been charged against them in regard to their treatment of Federal prisoners at Andersonville and elsewhere. It then goes on to cite a number of cases in proof of the fact that in every large prison at the North "cruelty was systematically practiced for the purpose of forcing prisoners to take the oath of allegiance to the Federal Government; or, in case of their refusal, of enfeebling their health to such an extent as to render them unfit for military service on their return to the South." The diaries of some of these prisoners, and the personal narratives of many others are given in evidence of the truth of the allegation. All of these details are wholly new to the public, and the record thus made up stamps with infamy the officials under whose orders so much wanton suffering was inflicted.

The writer next proceeds to contrast the abundant supplies at the North with the terrible straits in food, in clothing, and in medicines to which the South was reduced. He adds:

Notwithstanding all these difficulties, notwithstanding the outrages committed by Northern troops, and the cruelties committed by Northern jailors, it is a fact well known to the intimate friends of Mr. Davis, that he persistently turned a deaf ear to the entreaties of extreme men, and that he steadfastly refused to inaugurate in the Confederacy a system of persecution which was utterly repugnant to every sentiment of his nature, and to the feelings of every brave and high-toned leader in the South. The fact is, that it was the intention and desire of the Confederate Government to provide for its prisoners of war as it did for its own men. When however, there was a scarcity of food the preference was naturally given to Southern soldiers in the field. Speaking of the difficulty of providing even for these, Major General Beth said: "If the soldiers last winter under my command had been in prison, and had been restricted to the rations allowed them, they would have been found miserably insufficient. Some days they had no meat; at other times they had no meal. I myself have repeatedly gone to my horse's feed trough and robbed him of corn, which I parched to appease my hunger. Had my men been in confinement their sufferings would have been intense. But they were in the open air; they were free; they were active; they were constantly skimming themselves, and they had other things to think about besides their own personal discomforts. Had it been otherwise the troops of my division would have been decimated by disease."

The entire article is painfully interesting and as material for history this narrative of personal sufferings and personal indignities endured by Southern men in Northern prisons; brief as it is, will be of no little value at some future day in any history of the civil war which is written by Northern historians.—Baltimore Gazette.

Gents:—The wonderful cures which have been made by your Poultryers' Friend cannot fail to interest all who raise poultry. A gentleman of this village has been experimenting on chickens with the gapes. He tried your Poultryers' Friend, according to the directions, and it had the desired effect in removing the worm, effectually relieving the chicken at once.
